Experts for municipal partnerships worldwide (FKPW)

FKPW in one sentence:

The programme FKPW promotes active partnerships between municipalities or municipal associations in Germany and the Global South by placing municipal experts to work within a municipality or a municipal association locally in the Global South.

Objectives and tasks of the experts

Strengthening the partner municipality

Strengthening the partnership

improve municipal services and local self-governance

develop concrete solutions to current issues

advise on funding opportunities

Implement joint partnership initiatives

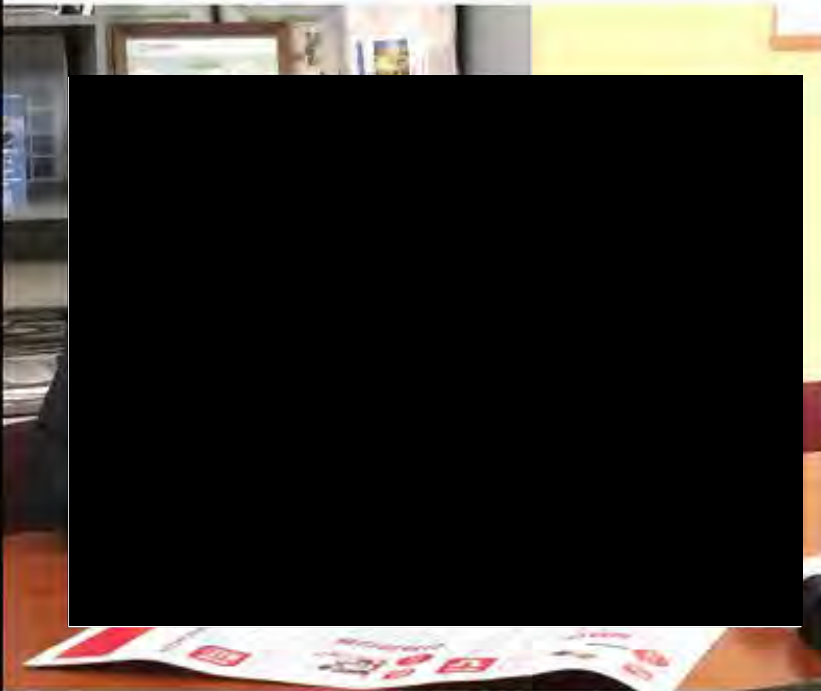

Advise on project management and implementation

Expand cooperation and stakeholder networks

Build bridges

Create a sustainable basis and (communication) structures

Types of experts

FKPW offers three types of experts:

1. International experts
 - Integrated experts
 - Development advisors
2. Local experts

The choice of the expert type depends on:

- objective of the assignment and profile of the specialist
- country-specific framework conditions
- local authority in partner country and security
- status of the municipal partnership

Deployment possibilities

Expert for one municipal partnership

Upon request, the project supports municipal partnerships through the deployment of an expert:

- Funding period: normally two years
- Profile and expert model depend on the objective of the assignment and the need of the partnership

Expert for a partnership between municipal associations

Deployment of an expert in a municipal association at state or federal level to increase the capacity for cooperation with their German partnering municipal association:

- Exemplary tasks for an expert:
 - expanding support and lobbying capacities for municipal partnerships;
 - providing greater support for specialized topics of municipal partnerships within the association
- Declaration of interest to be signed by the German municipal association and the partner association

Expert in a municipal association for several municipal partnerships

Deployment of an expert in a municipal association in order to support the cooperation of its members with German partner municipalities:

- Exemplary tasks:
 - support member municipalities and/or municipal association in capacity development
 - Support member municipalities in improving the conditions for expanding their partnerships with German municipalities
- Expert would mainly work within the municipal association with frequent travels to the municipalities involved
- Declaration of interest to be signed by at least two municipal partnerships and the municipal association in the Global South

Deployment possibilities

Expert for several municipal partnerships

Several municipal partnerships can jointly apply for a municipal expert assignment:

- Beneficial for small and medium-sized municipalities, which want to share the services of an expert
- Preferred when geographical proximity of the individual municipalities is given
- Expert works part-time in the different municipalities
- Support on specific technical issues that concern all municipal partnerships involved,
- Support in capacity development with regard to cooperation and project management
- Interested municipal partnerships jointly submit a declaration of interest, which is signed by all participating municipalities

How to get an expert

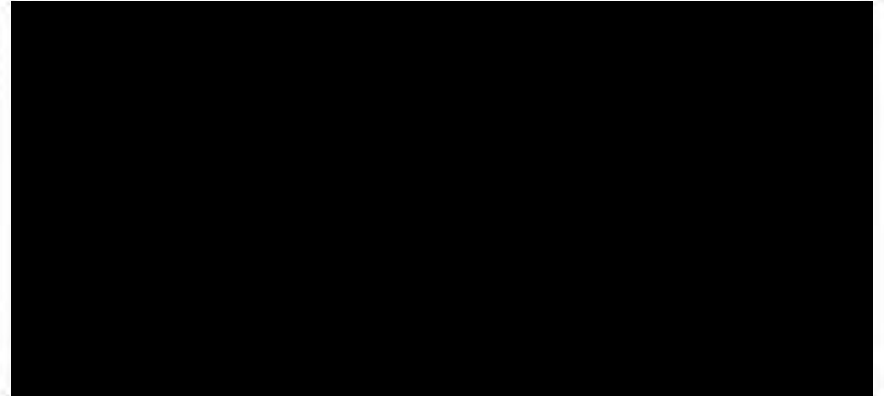

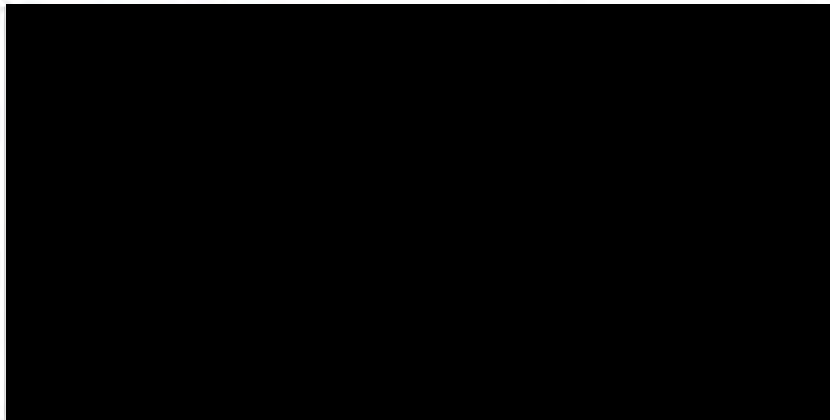

1. Declaration of interest by the municipal partnership / municipal association(s)
2. Advisory and consultation process between the partnership and the FKPW team;
3. Appraisal mission or remote appraisal: draft of the objectives, role and profile of the expert
4. Approval by German ministry BMZ
5. Recruitment process
6. Onboarding and secondment of the expert to the partner country
7. Support for expert placement through regular backstopping and networking activities

Procedure and types of experts

Does this sound interesting? Then we invite you and your partner municipality to send us a declaration of interest. In cooperation with us, you define which skills an assigned expert would need and which tasks and goals he or she would be responsible for. We will look for an expert who is suitable for working with your partnership and support him or her in dealing with all formalities until their departure.

The programme offers different types of expert assignments, depending on the needs of your particular partnership:

- Integrated experts are European experts who work in key positions on technical and strategic issues within the organisational structure of the municipal institution in the partner country. They have a local employment contract and a local salary from their employer that is topped up to European level by FKPW. The Centre for International Migration and Development (CIM) supports the recruitment.
- Development workers are European experts who advise the partner municipality on technical and methodological issues and support them in organisational development and networking. They work at the partner municipality, but their contract and salary are handled by FKPW.
- Local experts come from the partner country. They have a local contract with the partner municipality, the financing of which is supported by FKPW.

Not all types of experts can be assigned to all countries. The type selected will depend on the context. We are happy to provide further advice.

Experts for municipal partnerships worldwide

The programme

The 'Experts for municipal partnerships worldwide' programme (FKPW) promotes active partnerships between municipalities, towns, cities and districts in Germany and the Global South through the employment of municipal experts. They work on local assignments for around two to four years, in one or several municipalities or municipal associations in the Global South. Our work is geared towards the expertise and timeframe that is relevant to your partnership's requirements. We provide additional support for assignments in the form of networking and technical exchange events as well as other activities.

The municipal experts contribute to

- improving municipal services and local self-government;
- developing hands-on solutions for current issues such as climate change, municipal finance and waste management;
- expanding cooperation between partner municipalities;
- implementing successful joint initiatives,
- and bringing new players into the partnership, for example from local administration, civil society or the private sector.

Example: the work of [REDACTED] in Durban

Forging new links, meeting one another, relaxing – in the not-too-distant future, all this will be possible on the fallow land that lies between KwaMashu Township and the newly constructed urban centre, Bridge City, in the South African city of Durban. This is the goal Durban's city administration is working towards, together with its partner city, Bremen, and [REDACTED], a city planner who supports their partnership work in the name of FKPW. [REDACTED] has extensive experience in designing open urban spaces and a strong commitment to creating a participatory and interdisciplinary process.

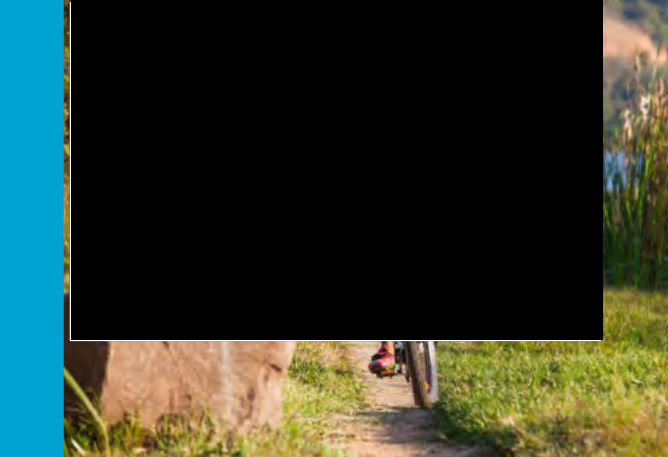

[REDACTED] is a great asset for us. She's an excellent expert who is sharing her technical skills and project management experience from Germany with us at the city administration.'

[REDACTED] | Economic Development and Investment Promotion Unit, Durban

Crossing the wasteland is presently quite difficult and dangerous. But people living in KwaMashu should also be able to benefit from Bridge City's wide-ranging infrastructure. This is why Durban's City Council wishes to involve KwaMashu's residents in decisions on the future use and appearance of the vacant land. Instead of being a dividing, frightening area, it should become a linking space that can actively be used. At the same time, the area will retain its function as a vital urban wetland and flood plain in the context of adapting to the impacts of climate change. The scheme is also benefiting from experience gathered in the Municipal Climate Partnership with Bremen.

'The great advantage an expert brings is his or her knowledge of the structures not only in the partner country but also here in Bremen. That's hugely beneficial for us in keeping our city partnership truly alive.'

[REDACTED] plenipotentiary of the federal state of Bremen to the Federation for Europe and development cooperation

To ensure that the planning process considers different points of view, one of [REDACTED] colleagues has brought together employees from several City Council departments in a project group, with the aim of drafting a joint proposal for the future park's open spaces. The first step is to reclaim the land through clean-up campaigns, landscaping and the creation of a bike park. To achieve this, [REDACTED] is organising workshops, round tables and other forms of participation with the neighbouring residents. Her project group is also receiving support from initiatives based in Bremen: for example, the Bremen 'sport garden' is providing inspiration for a new recreation centre.

Alongside her technical work, [REDACTED] is also responsible for maintaining and intensifying the city partnership with Bremen, which goes back to 2011. With the aim of increasing professional exchange and knowledge transfer between both local administrations, she has been involved in joint workshops on such subjects as urban agriculture and pedestrian and cycle traffic, and in setting up various other exchanges and study visits. In the process, she has become a valuable contact person for both partners on many different issues.
